SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1881.

THE STARTLING tragedy of this morning appears to have been the work of a maniac. What may have been the particular cause or quality of the mania is not of so much interest just as are the probable or possible consequences of the act to the public. Twice now within sixteen years has the career of an American Chief-Magistrate been terminated by violence. Twice has the nation been plunged, without a moment's warning, into a complete revolution in the persomes, and therewith of the policy and throbbed before, over the awful problem it tone of its government; not by act of the people, but by that mysterious Agency whose Hand is invisible and whose selection of instrumentalities is inscrutible. If our Government were the ablood-thirsty Revolutionists, and a despotism; if the President, who has fal- the red-headed Sans Culottes have been len, had been a tyrant; if the people, or even any class of them, had been goaded to madness by wrong, oppression or injustice at the hands of their Chief Magistrate; if even the President himself had been a man of nature and methods calculated to excite the personal animosity of his fellow-men. there might be some thread of logic, however frail or brittle, on which to hang a theory of motive, public or private.

But none of these conditions exist. There is nothing in the character of our Government or in the modes of its administration to excite the deadly passions of any of its citizens. The President himself was a man of singularly amiable nature, and his methods were almost to a fault those of kindness, gentleness and generosity.

The theory of political conspiracy, is, according to all present advices, too absurd to be seriously considered. There were factional strifes, but the bitterness engendered by them was not extraordinary, and even such resentment as existed was not directed at the President himself so much as at others who were supposed to be his advisers. In short, without wasting time in tedious and foundationless speculation, there was no conceivable cause, pretext or shadow of motive for the act that could have found a moment's lodgment in any sane or deliberate head or heart.

It therefore appears that in addition to the ordinary vicissitudes of nature, an

with the present attack on our President. Great strife breeds relentless batred and maniaes thirsting for revenge. If the same spirit of assassination stalks abroad at midday, when peace and harmony prevail, it is time to pause and ask whether the President of the United States should not, for wise and beneficent purposes, be surrounded with more personal protection than the spirit of our laws has sanctioned, our fancied security, more glaring before the eyes of the world, when they saw a President inaugurated four years ago in peace and order, and by the quiet operations of law and the popular demand for harmony, even against the verdiet of a vast majority of her countrymen, we have been led to look with complacency on the conspiracies which have stained the history of monarchical Europe. The notion that Nihilism in any shape that took the form of violence could ever protrude itself on the quiet political institutions of the United States would be branded as the raving of a maniac. Our national peace of mind has been suddenly aroused; our trust in the perfect success of lawful selfgovernment has been shaken; and the heart of this great country will throb, as it never is called upon to confront. We are reluctantly forced to face the worst. While we have been slumbering in simple faith in the policy of American institutions, the deeds of the Nihilists, growing silently and undisturbed on our soil. Political dementia, halting at no weapons that insure success, has been nourished into life and at last instigated to overt and violent measures. Has the time indeed come when the President of the United States must rely for security of life and limb on coats of mailarmed body-guards, troops of sentinels and howitzers mounted at the WhiteHouse gates? Must the head that wears this highest civic honor on earth rest uneasy as the one that wears the regal crown? It is a question compared with which all others which have met us in our history pale into insignificance. Can we discern the grim, repulsive shadow of Roman imperialism and Russian conspiracy cast upon our political life as the shadow of the Cross is cast in the famous painting by Holman Hunt? Have we grown old enough to breed the insane Nihilist as a feature of our peaceful American life? It is time to be aroused. Heroic treat ment is demanded by this woful crisis. The President of the United States must be guaranteed the personal safety of his life, at whateven sacrifice of Republican prejudice, or Bepublican government will become nothing better than a faded memory of the

THE QUESTION now with all the newfangled apparatus for ventilation is simply whether the thing works or not. There is an immense quantity of machinery offered for American President is liable to momentary destruction at the hands of any and every imaginable lunatic, maniac or vagarist; and with that terrible risk is carried all the conceivable chances of sudden revolution in the gravest and most important public concerns.

THE BOSTONIANS are considering the feasibility of setting apart certain portions of the city parks for the exclusive use of women and girls. In these spaces, protected from any annoyance by undesirable specta-tors, they could freely enjoy such games as tors, they could freely enjoy such games as ball, croquet, lawn-tennis, etc., and practice archery. Much can be urged in favor of such an arrangement as offering an op-portunity for wholesome recreation to those with are much in need of the exercise, and the plan is worthy of serious consideration in all localities where the female popula-tion is large.
